Says His Brother Broke Up His Family and Caused His Downfall.

Sam Taylor, carpenter foreman at the Pearson mills, is in Hotel Dieu in a serious condition with several knife wounds in his body which his brother, J. D. Taylor, also a carpenter, held in the city jail, admits having inflicted. The trouble started on Broadway, be-tween San Antonio and Overland streets, shortly before 8 oclock Monday night, when the brothers met for the first time in several months. Sam was sitting in front of the "Old Kentucky" saloon when his brother approached and spoke to several other men sitting there. J. D. tells this story of the stabbing and the trouble that led up

"My brother was sitting in front of the saloon and when I spoke to the other men he looked up, recognized me and called me a tramp. I told him he was to blame for that, as he and his wife had put me on the hummer, having interfered with my home affairs and caused my wife to leave me. She died later in Arizona.

"When I told my brother that he was to blame for my being a tramp he cursed me and called me a vile name. There-upon I told him he should be ashamed, but he said: 'I have been waiting for this to come, and now it has come.' Thereupon he set upon me and beat me over the arms with a heavy stick. I drew my knife to protect myself. I am sorry that I stabbed him, but I had to do something. Now I will go to court. It was all over family affairs." Jim Taylor was arrested at 10 oclock by policeman Kinman and a charge of assault to murder is registered against him at the police station. The police-man found him in his room in the Essex

Compensation Bill Passes Senate.

A workmen's compensation bill was passed in the senate resterday by 64 to 15, substantially as framed by the employers' liability commission and amended only to increase its benefits. The principal changes made in the bill during 3 hours of roll call, provided that compensation for accidental injury and death of railroad employes shall continue to children until they are slateen years old and would extend payment in thecase of daughters until they are twenty, unless societ married.

In general, the bill would provide an exclusive remedy and compensation for accidental disability or death to employes of railroads in interstate commerce or the district of Columbia. It would provide medical service for the injured and means for money recovery proportioned to the pay for the victim. It is outcome of a long investigation by the commission and was strongly arged by president Taft.
